

COURSE ANNOUNCEMENT:
HUMANE DOG CAPTURE AND HANDLING
- MAXIMIZING SUCCESS AND MINIMIZING THE FIGHT -

Hosted by Local Area Disaster Responders
June 4 - 6, 2010 Renton, Washington

Global Wildlife Resources will be teaching a three day course specifically for the animal control officer, shelter worker, and disaster responder. This is the most extensive course in handling fearful dogs. This is essential for professionals addressing hoarding cases, responding to disasters, handling fearful dogs in shelters, assisting with trap/neuter/release programs, and rescuing dogs in general.

The course instructor is the dynamic Dr. Mark Johnson of Global Wildlife Resources of Bozeman, MT. Dr. Johnson, once veterinarian for Yellowstone National Park, has worked nationwide in wildlife capture operations and teaches internationally for universities, national parks, & state/federal/tribal agencies.

Honoring each animal through equipment and techniques

GWR courses promote care, honor, and respect for each animal that is handled; and are often profound career experiences for course participants.

This course is a product of Dr. Johnson's experience handling over 2,000 feral dogs throughout the world including the Caribbean, India, tribal lands, and rescue operations after Hurricane Katrina. He is also author of the Feral Dog Blog and was an instructor for Project Vet train for the government of India Animal Welfare Board.

In addition to thorough instruction on chemical immobilization, Dr. Johnson will enthusiastically cover a variety of approaches for physical restraint, boxtrapping, and the use of the Y pole. Unlike the other courses, Mark modifies every course to meet the needs of those attending. This GWR course trains participants in the use of the Y pole to provide the handler with a compassionate advantage when working with aggressive dogs.

Class size is limited to 40 participants, so register early! The course includes a course notebook, Certificate of Training, and thumbdrive with course content and material from our website. The 3-day course fee is $550 ($575 after May 10). Places in this course are reserved once payment is received.
